Litter bugs local volunteers

If everybody pitches in all year round, litter eradication efforts will really pick up in Somers, says a band of local volunteers.

And that's not just trash talk from a town task force with the motto "Clean Streets Matter."

The group brought the Town Board up to speed on its activities recently, suggesting ways other entities could step up, and asking it for more guidance and funding.

Keeping on top of refuse is "a constant chore," according to task force president Dr. Suzy Moravick.

Despite educational campaigns, twice-yearly townwide cleanups—and other organizations, clubs, businesses and dedicated individuals doing their bit—the situation has become "insurmountable," she said.

Task force members Rich Nash, Barbara Noth, Bruce Heller and Sandy DeSena also showed the flag.

Success depends on taking a multipronged, prolonged and coordinated approach that draws on judicial, law enforcement, educational and, most importantly, governmental resources, they said.

"We need the Town Board's help to rid ourselves of this blight on our town," Moravick said.

Top on its "Dear Santa" list was budgeted funding for cleanup efforts.

Task force member Annie Gullen pointed out that Yorktown and Bedford both have municipal recycling centers. "We could learn from them and maybe do a better job," she suggested.

This past spring's Battle of Yorktown managed to bag 18,232 pounds of rubbish. While a once-a-year blitz like that might not solve all of Somers' litter woes, it could boost community pride, Gullen said.

(City Carting, a private business on Route 100, hosts electronic waste recycling events that raise money for the nonprofit. It, and several other local businesses such as

Dance and Literature for Children Nursery Book Club course 4 paperback 17 Dance and Literature for Children.. Matthew Lee's dad, Joe Fenton, who had been living in a care home at the time of his son's death said that he could have been able to save as much as £1m on top of the £2,000 they had paid out.. It looks like the money they paid Mr Fenton for the purchase of the house would have never gone to the family.

th grad classroom Dana and I took some math lessons from our teachers (who happen to be super cool people). We read two books from the library: Harry Potter - a magical saga about Harry Potter, and the Science of Magic by Carl Sagan. Carl Sagan is a man of the world. He is great and witty when it comes to science and philosophy. He was a fellow in both the SETI Institute and Sagan's famous "Lava Boat" expedition. Carl Sagan is the author of over 80 books and has been the subject of many science stories in our family. I read him books because I love science, and Carl Sagan is one of the finest modern astronomers! Dana and I talked to our teachers about each topic: how to teach the kids math. (Of course I tried to explain to her exactly what Math means and how you get out of doing it, all while singing "I Am Everything.") The teachers were very thoughtful and really helped us understand how to do the learning that we had learned and teach to them. The teachers also gave us suggestions on how we could teach the kids science. I think our teachers really wanted everyone to do well in math. When we got home, we went to school that day and the teacher wanted us to write on the chalkboards about what is and is not appropriate for class. After reading a few sentences of the notes I had created, we all wrote on our board notes. One kid wrote "The following statements must be written in lower case, and always with the first syllable of the word." My parents and I are both pretty shy about showing our kids our notes or anything from the chalkboards. I think that everyone is more confident in their pencil-and-paper abilities when they see the notes in action in class.. In addition to what I learned about math in grade school, Dana and I talked about some of the other important topics in science. We were very inspired, especially on a science question. We were interested in the new book that I had just received, The Mindless World. In the book, a person (me) goes through what are called "the Mindless World" – worlds without consciousness, places that don't care about us and/or that do not care about us. We talked about this for quite a while, and it had a very significant impact on our thinking of the Mindless World.. The family of Matthew Lee Fenton, 37, of Port Melbourne, believed that they would be given some protection from having to pay the man £2,000 worth of back mortgage interest on the mansion when they moved in with him six months after moving in..
